The Taiyang Star, akin to the Sun, holds symbolic significance in Chinese astrology. It represents fathers and sons, while for women, it symbolizes their husbands and sons. In ancient times, the brightness or darkness of this star was used to discern the life journey of one's father, husband, and son. A bright Taiyang Star signifies good fortune, whereas a less radiant one may indicate challenges, such as premature mortality. Individuals born under the Taiyang Star exhibit admirable qualities: kindness, generosity, and a lack of attachment to material gains. They bear no grudges and maintain an upright character. However, their subjectivity can lead to harshness and arrogance, often asserting themselves and inadvertently offending others. These individuals are typically mobile, extroverted, and drawn to travel, exercise, and dynamic work. Additionally, they enjoy mentoring younger people. Much like the Sun radiates warmth, those influenced by the Taiyang Star possess boundless enthusiasm for progress. They eschew calculations and selflessly extend help without expecting anything in return.

This star has a noble character that is more concerned with name than profit or when doing business they prefer to make a reputation first and then make a profit later. Their wealth will also increase along with their increasing reputation. They are also a person who likes to be praised and stand out, so they are easy to attract envy. People under this star in the Mental sector often suffer from headaches or eye pain, and in old age they are prone to heart disease and high blood pressure. A person with this star in the Wu position gets the Jin Can Guan Hui star formation because this star is very bright and indicates that in life they will achieve great social status and prosperity. There is another formation when this star is in the Self sector in the Chen position, called Dan Chi Gui Chi. This position is considered good because the Taiyang star and the Taiyin star are both bright, so such a person will have achieved success at a young age. However, if the position is reversed and the Self sector is shaded by the Taiyang star in the Xu position, the formation Ri Yue Fan Bei shows that their youth was difficult and they often encounter failures. People with this stars formation should migrate when they are young.
